Oil on board

Opening bid: $18,500

I am never quite sure what an artist statement is supposed to convey to the reader that the art already does not express to you, but in any event artist statements seem to be a prerequisite these days. Hopefully the serious observer of my paintings should be able to take away their own ideas and their own theory behind the creation of the art. What I do, is all about imagination and storytelling, only I am using paint to get the job done. The scenes I create often appear quite simple but are often, in reality, very complex and detailed in their creation. The story you arrive at is your own and is likely different than my story and that is the way it should be. Art should make you think and trigger your imagination. Not all art needs to be harsh, intimidating or striving to deliver a hammer blow between the eyes. Sometimes it can be soothing to the soul and still be valid and still be good.
